Evesham to Honeybourne

Points of interest

The Fleece Inn (NT)
The building itself is a traditional 'Longhouse' a kind of simple farm building used to house both humans and animals. Hailing from the 15th Century and now over 600 years old, it has only served as a pub since 1848.

This is possibly one of the Vale of Evesham's most iconic pubs and it's now owned by the National Trust and still operated as a local pub - albeit hosting lots of festivals across various different themes including Asparagus, Morris Dancing and folk nights.

The pub and surrounding village green was also used as a film set in 1994 for the BBC's adaptation of Dickens' novel 'Martin Chuzzlewit'.

Asparagus growing in the Vale of Evesham is a traditional crop of the region and is available between April and July. The stalks grow to a maximum height of approximately 22cm.

Asparagus and Evesham

The Vale of Evesham is the largest producer of Asparagus in Northern Europe via it's sandy soils which promote the ease of growing and deep root systems. The area also hosts the annual 'British Asparagus Festival' which involves both auctions of the vegetable and a linked music festival based in and around the Fleece Inn at Bretforton.

The festival is one of a number around the world celebrating all things Asparagus with other events taking place in both California USA and Germany. The Vale's asparagus enjoys 'Protected Name Status' linking the vegetable's production with the area in a similar manner to that of Champagne in the Champagne region and Parmigiano-Reggiano cheese in Italy where it's name is also legally protected. All products using the name 'Vale of Evesham Asparagus' have to observe strict government standards.
